TEN-YEAR PLAN FOR RURAL ELECTRICITY

Scheme to Cost Ten Millions

THAT a big scheme of electrical development will form the subject of a bill to be introduced in the Dail at an early date was indicated in an announcement made by the Government last night.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to enable the Electricity Supply Board to embark on a ten-year programme of rural electrification.

This will be the most ambitious effort in this country since the Ardnacrusha scheme was inaugurated by Mr. Patrick McGilligan when Minister for Industry and Commerce in the Cosgrave Government nearly 20 years ago. It follows a report upon which the Board has been engaged for the past year, and which has now been presented to the Government. The extension of a supply of electricity to the remotest parts of the country and to every farmstead is envisaged.

What it will mean was to some extent outlined by Mr. de Valera during the recent election campaign. A sum of not less than £10,000,000 was mentioned as the possible expenditure, and this may easily reach double that amount. It will mean the setting up of several new production stations like those at Ardnacrusha, near Limerick, and the Pigeon House in Dublin, and, in addition, the development of power from rivers which have not yet been drawn upon.

The Board will begin at once to prepare plans so that development may be undertaken simultaneously in as many areas as possible when the necessary legislation has been enacted and adequate supplies become available. Shortage of materials, it is thought, will not permit of actual construction being undertaken until the end of the emergency.

Steps will be taken to ensure that, as far as possible, the equipment required for installations in farm dwellings will be manufactured in Ireland by the Board or otherwise. The scheme, as well as supplying a much felt want, will provide much new and long-term employment.

Waterford's Plans For The Future

On Monday next a special committee meeting of Waterford Corporation will consider a comprehensive town and regional planning scheme for the city and environs, the Irish Times learns.

Based on a social and civic survey of Waterford, which has been pursued in detail over the past two years, the scheme embraces rehousing, communications, public health, industry, and availability of raw materials native to the region. The plan is co-ordinated with the Kilbarry reclamation scheme, and provides a long-range programme for post-war development of the region.

It was initiated in 1941 by Mr. D. A. Hegarty, the City Manager, and is said to have the full support of the Corporation. Mr. F. Gibney, M.Inst.R.A., Dublin, was responsible for the working out of the plan.

Rebate for Cork Gas Users

Nearly £25,000 is being returned to gas consumers in Cork City in the form of a rebate off the price of gas, the directors of the Cork Gas Consumers' Co., in their report for the half-year ended June 30th, state. The balance of profit and loss, after providing £2,000 for depreciation, is £27,579

It is proposed to pay a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, absorbing £2,741, leaving £24,838, which is being returned to consumers by way of rebate off the price of gas.

The directors state that there was an increase in profits due to the cost of coal proving less than anticipated.

"Silver Stone" in Cork Bog

Workers in a bog in a remote part of the Beara peninsula in West Cork recently found at a depth of eight feet a strangely-shaped piece of bright metal, which they thought would add to the collection of valuable antiques recently unearthed from Irish bogs.

Labelled "a silver stone—possibly part of a meteorite," it arrived at the Irish Antiquities Division of the National Museum a few days ago, sent by a friend of the museum in those parts to whom they owe some very valuable finds. Museum officials, however, decided that it was probably aluminum. The piece was sent then to metal experts, who classified it as a fused piece of an aluminium alloy of a very modern, tough kind—such as is used in aeroplane manufacture, and which fuses only at very high temperatures.

The theory now advanced is that it dropped out of an aeroplane in whose engine something had gone wrong.

Yellow Identity Cards

A stricter check is to be made on men and women from Eire who enter Great Britain, and a closer watch kept to see that they do not evade the National Service Act.

Entrants from Eire are being issued with a yellow temporary identity card, valid for three months, after which they will be ordered to attend at a local national registration office to have the temporary card endorsed to make it valid for a further period.

Finns Want Peace

LEADERS WARN PRESIDENT

THE full text of a letter sent recently to President Ryti, of Finland, and signed by thirty-three prominent members of different parties was released yesterday in Helsinki.

The letter stated that a great part of the Finnish population believed Finland has entered into a dangerous position which might entail the most serious consequences for the Finnish people and their freedom, and that the deterioration of relations with the U.S.A. had especially given rise to uneasiness. The letter continued:

GOOD RELATIONS

"Since the American Minister left the country, a series of events has taken place causing concern in wide circles among our people.

"According to our view, the re-establishment of good relations and mutual confidence with the United States should be one of the most important aims in our foreign policy in the immediate future. But we are fully conscious that the present situation also demands other measures from our Government.

"In this connection we only desire to point out that it is necessary, according to our view, that the Government takes measures aiming to separate us from the big Powers' war, and through such negotiations as conditions permit, secure the freedom, independence, and peace of our country.

"The possibilities in this connection should be immediately investigated and ascertained."

Most of the signatories are members of the Finnish Parliament. —(Reuter.)

Belfast Council Regains Powers

Most of the powers removed from Belfast City Council last year will be restored under a scheme which was sanctioned by the Northern Government yesterday.

The scheme, drawn up by Mr. W. Robinson, Chairman of the City Administrators, provides that the duties of the Administrators regarding contracts, employment of skilled and unskilled labour, land purchase and sale, and methods of carrying out Corporation work will be vested in officials, and the powers of the Administrators in relation to all other affairs will revert to the Council. The City Administrators were appointed by the Northern Ireland Ministry of Home Affairs last September, and the reason given was that the City Council had not put forward a scheme of municipal reform which the Minister could regard as adequate for the protection of ratepayers' interests.

By 23 votes to 12 the Corporation yesterday asked the Administrators to invite Mr. John Dunlop, Assistant Secretary to the Ministry of Home Affairs, to accept the post of Town Clerk at a salary of £2,500 a year. A proposal that the post should be advertised was defeated.

Customs Charges in Belfast

At Belfast Summons Court yesterday, a fine of £50, or four months' imprisonment, was imposed on John Corscadden, of Springfield road, for dealing in 1½ cwt. of boot nails, prohibited goods. Patrick Duffy, of MacSweeney street, Dundalk, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment; and Denis Joseph Cosgrove, St. Brigid's terrace, Dundalk, was fined £5 on a similar charge. Bail was fixed in Corscadden's case for appeal purposes. A fine of £15 was imposed on Ignatius McKinney, Auburn street, Belfast, for dealing in 1½ tons of wire and boot rivets to evade the export prohibition. Joseph P. Delaney, 188 Rathmines road, Dublin, was fined £25 for being concerned in dealing in 48 saw blades, and £6 for bringing them to the G.N.R. station, Belfast.

John James Corr, 5 Castle road, Clontarf, Dublin, was remanded on bail for a week on a charge of dealing in 1½ tons of wire, valued £150, with intent to evade the prohibition. It was stated that the accused man came to Belfast to give evidence in other smuggling cases, and was arrested on Thursday.

Wagon Builders' Wages Problem

"You have put me in the most difficult position that ever I have been in on this Tribunal," said Mr. W. E. Wylie, K.C., who presided at yesterday's sitting in Dublin of the Wages Advisory Tribunal. The Tribunal sat last Wednesday to hear an application for a standard wage and bonus orders on behalf of 148 wagon workers and eleven apprentices employed by the Great Southern Railways Co. in Dublin and Limerick, and adjourned.

The company's records, said the Chairman, showed that for the 14 weeks prior to the Appointed Day 17 men had been on piece-work, and earned an average of 88s. 7d., against an average of 92s. 8d. for the 14 weeks prior to May 10th last, when piece-work was abolished.

Mr. O'Hara said that the company had agreed to join in a bonus of 8s. a week on a standard rate of 80s. 2d. per week.

Mr. Wylie said that they were asked to fix a standard rate, but how were they to do so when they had two sets of men working in the same company at Inchicore and Broadstone doing the same work at different rates.

The Tribunal will report to the Minister.

"To Take Load Off Russia"

NEXT ALLIED MOVE MAY BE IN SARDINIA

MR. BRENDAN BRACKEN, British Minister of Information, at a Press Conference yesterday in New York, said: "We are going to do everything possible to take part of the tremendous load off Russia.

"We are definitely going to finish off Italy, but that will not deter us from cultivating campaigns in other parts of Europe."

General Smuts, Prime Minister of South Africa, yesterday said that Italy is as good as out of the war, but that the struggle would go on for some time. He doubts if it will be over before the end of 1944.

Discussing the Quebec Conference, a German radio commentator declared that the next Allied move may be in Sardinia.

Mr. Bracken was optimistic that a three-Power Conference including Russia would be arranged. He said:

"It is foolish to assume that Marshal Stalin's absence from Quebec or the shifting of Ambassadors is any indication that Russia is going to make separate peace with Germany; that is a story which unconscious Fifth Columnists are spreading. It is grossly insulting to Russia."

War to Last Until End of 1944

—General Smuts

IN an exclusive interview with Reuter's Special Correspondent at Union Buildings, Pretoria, yesterday, General Smuts, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, said: "The war will go on for some time, and I doubt whether it will be over before the end of 1944. Italy, however, is as good as out. She is in a most difficult position, and that part of the Axis can now be counted out. We are continuing to destroy her rail and other communications with great effect. I do not think Italy will move our prisoners into Germany. She is very unlikely to take that step now. In a short time she may have to surrender, and she will not want to make her position more difficult by such an outrage.

FEEDING EUROPE

"The most immediate problem in the post-war period will be feeding Europe. All reports show that there is terrible privation everywhere. By the end of the war everything will be eaten. Our first task will be to feed Europe and to maintain some semblance of order, because when men are hungry they fight and kill. That ruined and broken old world may lapse into chaos and disorder. If we take Italy soon we shall have to keep the Italians alive. The task for feeding Europe will be the biggest that man has ever undertaken. Europe will be a liability to the world for years.

"I think the Allies are right in insisting upon unconditional surrender. This war was brought about because Germany escaped unscathed from the last war and all the destructions in the adjoining countries, and Germany herself nourished the legend that her armies were victorious and were betrayed by the people at home. In this war it is different. The devastation in Germany has been very great. The evacuation of Berlin is a very remarkable event. It is a pointer to everybody how the war is going and what the Germans fear.

AFRICA'S FUTURE

"Africa is still going to play a big part in the war, but, apart from that, Africa is the continent of the future. It teems with wealth, and only awaits development.

"Germany entered this war believing she was a sure winner, but other countries produced better and more effective weapons, and Germany has definitely lost. That will be the lesson for future aggression, and it may prevent the outbreak of future wars—that and the new practice of peaceful collaboration after this war."

Serious Illness of King Boris

The following bulletin about King Boris of Bulgaria was issued yesterday by the King's Physician, Dr. St. Daskaloff, quoted by the German News Agency last night:—

"A few days ago His Majesty was suddenly taken ill. His condition was very serious from the beginning, but to-day the patient has shown signs of improvement which give rise to hope that, provided no further complications occur, the danger has passed for the time being."—(Reuter.)

The Bulgarian Cabinet held a meeting lasting two and a half hours on Thursday night, according to French radio. The German News Agency added that the Bulgarian Premier yesterday called a meeting of all former Prime Ministers.

A special bulletin issued in Sofia said—according to the German News Agency—that the condition of King Boris continues to be serious. The Synod of the Orthodox Church has ordered prayers in all the Bulgarian churches for his recovery.

Lord Louis Mountbatten.

U.S. Deputy to New Chief

Lord Louis Mountbatten completed a whirlwind round of conferences with high officials yesterday in Washington, and word was circulated in informed quarters that Lieutenant-General Stilwell was stated to be his Deputy Commander-in-Chief in the South-East Asia Command.

Official confirmation of this is lacking, but it is known that the Deputy Command will go to an American, according to an Associated Press message.

According to a Reuter's cable, Lord Louis is understood to have selected his American Deputy Chief of Staff, but at present the latter is identified only as a young prominent adviser to General George Marshall, Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army. Lord Mountbatten left Washington last night for an unannounced destination.

RUDOLPH HESS

Mr. Bracken, referring to Rudolph Hess's arrival in Britain, said that Hess had definitely flown to Britain because he believed he could find British Quislings ready to overthrow the Churchill Government and to cease attacking Germany while Hitler smashed Russia.

Mr. Churchill, who has been spending a few days at a fishing camp in the Laurentian Mountains, will rejoin President Roosevelt at Washington early next week, Reuter cables from Quebec. The British Prime Minister will broadcast next Tuesday.

Discussing the results of the Quebec conference, the Berlin Radio commentator, Captain Sertorius, said last night:—

"It cannot, of course, be predicted with certainty where the next invasion attempt will take part. One thing, however, can be said in spite of the propaganda made by the British Press—a landing on the occupied territories in the west is the least probable.

"Actions against Norway or Denmark are possible, though a number of military considerations would counsel against it. The most likely idea might be an invasion of Sardinia or of the Italian mainland. Jumping board for that is, in the opinion of the Allies, their possession of Sicily. Two weeks ago it definitely looked as if such an action was imminent.

"Meanwhile, indications have come up again which put an invasion in the Balkans within the reach of possibilities. Above all, it has been repeatedly observed that in the past fortnight the concentrations of transports in the Western Mediterranean have grown smaller, because an essential part of these ships has been transferred to the Eastern Mediterranean.

"The conclusion that this may mean the preparation of an attack against the south-eastern flank of Europe is not far from the truth.

"Of course, it is always possible that in the Western Mediterranean an invasion attempt is also imminent, and that the Allied High Command is considering the plan to combine both landing operations.

"It is needless to point out that Germany and Italy and their Allies are ready for each one of these possibilities, and also for any combinations of such possibilities, and are prepared to defend themselves." —(Reuter.)

R.A.F. Pilot on a Berlin Roof

After Tuesday night's raid on Berlin, says a Reuter's telegram from Madrid, an R.A.F. pilot was found lying on the roof of a flat in the city occupied by the Berlin correspondent of Arriba, the Spanish Falangist organ, who says:

"I took him into my flat, where I gave him a glass of water. He took out some cigarettes and we each smoked one. I told him it was my duty to hand him over to the police. Some minutes later they called for him and took him away in a car."

Northern Ireland Appointments

It is understood that Mr. Leslie G. P. Freer, Liaison Officer in London on behalf of the Northern Ireland Government, has been appointed Assistant Secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs, and that Mr. A. J. Kelly, Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet, may succeed him in London. Mr. Freer, a native of Derry, was educated at Foyle College and Trinity College, Dublin.

Sevsk Captured by Soviet Troops

TRAP THREAT IN DONETZ

A RENEWED Russian offensive on a 100-mile front has been launched against Bryansk, vital rail centre and one of the few "hedgehog" strongholds still left on this front.

The capture of Sevsk, 65 miles south of Bryansk, at the northern corner of the original Kursk salient, was reported in last night's Soviet communiqué, which said that Russian troops had broken enemy resistance and taken over 20 places.

A Reuter Military Correspondent writes:—"The capture of Sevsk is an outstanding feat of arms. Before reaching the town the attackers would have had to advance without cover across low-lying meadows, force the east bank of a shallow, swift stream, and then scale the steep western bank, which rises to a height of 150 feet. Sevsk controls several important highways."

Berlin said last night that Russian artillery and tanks had punched dents in the German line between Sevsk and Zhidra, on the Bryansk-Moscow Railway.

North of Poltava, where the Russian wedge beyond Kharkov is being driven deeper into the Ukraine towards the Dnieper—now only 60 miles away—last night's Soviet communiqué reported the recapture of Kotelva, 60 miles west of Kharkov and about 30 miles north-east of Poltava.

"According to reports from neutral sources, M. Stalin is to visit the Caucasus shortly to meet British and American military and political representatives," Rome Radio stated this morning. He will also review his army of the Kuban and his Black Sea Fleet," it added.—(Reuter.)

Russian forces further south have captured an important height in the German Donetz defences, and are driving their wedge steadily further towards the Donbas centre of Stalino, Reuter's Special Correspondent in Moscow cabled.

BIG BATTLE

A gigantic battle of tanks and mechanised units along the railway from Poltava to Slavyansk, 30 miles south-east of Izyum, was reported by Paris radio. Here Russian forces advancing from Izyum are apparently attempting, in co-operation with those driving on Stalino, to pinch out the whole German salient formed by the big Donetz bend between Izyum and Rostov.

The Germans were yesterday faced with a huge double task, cabled Reuter's special correspondent in Moscow. They are:—

(1) To prevent Soviet forces from breaking through across the Poltava-Kiev railway and reaching the Dnieper river, only 60 miles away;

(2) To prevent the Soviet pincer movement from trapping large German armies in the Donetz basin.

The Red Army is driving its wedge steadily further towards Stalino, the big German base.

German radio announced good progress in the western wing of the Kharkov sector, where the Germans continued the attack begun on the previous day.

Last night's Soviet communiqué said that in the Donetz Basin, south-west of Voroshilovgrad, Russian troops continued to develop successfully their advance. During Thursday, on all fronts, they destroyed 63 German tanks and shot down 61 'planes.—(Associated Press and Reuter.)

Expelled from North

Ellen Lacy (25), a Dublin woman, described as a mannequin, with an address at University street, Belfast, was charged, at Belfast Custody Court yesterday, with maliciously breaking a taxi-cab window. It was stated that there was an expulsion order against the girl, who had been refused a residence permit, and the case was adjourned to enable effect to be given to the order.

Swedish Protest to Germany

Sweden is awaiting a reply to her protest to Germany over the sinking of two Swedish fishing boats by German mine sweepers on Wednesday night, Reuter's correspondent cables from Stockholm. An explanation and news of the fate of the fishermen have also been asked for.

Stockholm Radio said last night that Swedish aircraft yesterday attacked a group of three German naval vessels by mistake. The incident occurred when a squadron of Swedish aircraft were going out on manœuvres to "attack" three ships. When he reached the target area the Squadron Leader could not find the three ships. Nearby, however, he spotted three vessels, and, thinking they were the target, gave the order to attack.

The German ships were not hit, but bullets were seen splashing in the water around the vessels, which opened fire on the aircraft.

The incident was seen from a coastal control station, and a report was immediately sent to the Swedish Naval Command. It is reported to have taken place outside Swedish territorial waters.

Allies Close On Bairoko

Allied forces advancing on Bairoko Harbour, last Japanese stronghold on the north-western tip of New Georgia, in face of weakening opposition, now control most of the shore line, says Reuter's special correspondent at Allied Headquarters, South-West Pacific.

In New Guinea, Australian troops, pressing forward on the last lap of the long journey to Salamaua, Japanese base on the east coast of the island, have repulsed a Japanese attack at Roosevelt Ridge, five miles from the Salamaua isthmus.

Meanwhile, nearly 100 Fortresses, Liberators and Mitchells made a devastating attack on Hansa Bay, another base on the north-east coast of New Guinea, halfway between Wewak and Madang. Hitting ammunition dumps and sinking a 6,000 ton transport in the harbour, they left the shoreline between Condor Point and Nubia in a mass of flames, smoke rising 3,000 feet, according to General MacArthur's communiqué.

A 7,000 ton merchantman, approaching the New Ireland coast, was destroyed by a United States heavy reconnaissance unit.

The Business Committee of the Ulster Unionist Council met in Belfast yesterday and discussed post-war policy—unemployment, housing, transport, health services and matters relating to party reorganisation.

Attacked by Ships and 'Planes

BRITISH naval units and the Allied Air Forces have dealt new blows at South Italy, Reuter's Special Correspondent cables from Allied Headquarters in North Africa.

While American Flying Fortresses and British Wellingtons were cutting communication lines north of Naples, Allied warships bombarded the mainland around the "toe." Locri, 20 miles north-east of Cape Spartivento and on the main rail and road routes, was shelled from the sea on Tuesday night. On Wednesday a British cruiser bombarded Axis positions on the Calabrian coast towards the southern end of the Straits. Allied bombers also attacked railway junctions at Locri and gun positions at Reggio.

Continuing their non-stop bombing of Italian communications further north, North-West African bombers struck at three Italian airfields and railways on Thursday and again at night. Strong forces of Fortresses and Marauders struck at the Capua and Grazzanise airfields, north of Naples, during the day, and when darkness fell Wellingtons attacked the railway yards at Bagnoli, on the outskirts of Naples.

Dr. Salazar, Portuguese Prime Minister and War Minister, is officially stated to have conferred four times during the past week with the Under-Secretary for War, Captain Santos Costa. He has also had a talk with the Minister of Marine.—(Reuter.)

Capua, 20 miles from Naples, is a vital rail junction on routes from Naples to Rome and those feeding Foggia and the Adriatic ports. Thousands of fragmentation bombs and tons of H.E. were dropped on the aerodrome, and many parked aircraft were destroyed, it is stated.

In a running battle between the target and the coast with 45 to 50 Axis fighters, Fortresses, it is claimed, shot down 8, and the escorting Lightnings 4 more. Marauders, attacking Grazzanise Aerodrome, shot down 3 fighters, and badly damaged parked planes and buildings, the message states.

SARDINIA

Warhawks went once more to Sardinia to attack targets in and around Cagliari.

Seven Allied aircraft are missing from all these operations, during which 15 enemy aircraft were shot down.

Fighters and fighter-bombers, it is stated, destroyed or damaged more than 350 Axis ships in and near the Messina Straits in 12 days.

The Journal De Geneve says that as a result of the Allied raids Milan is "absolutely uninhabitable."

Reporting that the permanent evacuation of workers is planned, the paper says:—"The majority of the workers have lost their livelihood, but still place confidence in the present Government. This will not last for ever."

Naples is reported to be fairly intact, excepting the harbour and industrial quarters.

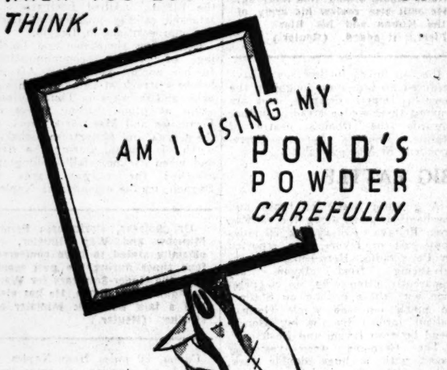
WHEN YOU LOOK IN YOUR MIRROR THINK...



To-day Pond's Powder is truly precious. You should not waste an atom. By using the economy hints below you will find your powder will last much longer.

KEEP THESE ECONOMY HINTS

Economise in the use of your powder by using less Pond's Vanishing Cream. Apply the cream sparingly with the tip of the little finger. Apply it only to the bridge of the nose, cheek-bone, curve of the brow and between the eyebrows. Let it dry for two or three minutes and then powder. The more cream you use the more powder is necessary.

Make up properly once, or at the most, twice a day. This will eliminate the necessity for frequent "first aid" treatment. Remember Pond's will "stay put" through the longest day for used with Pond's Vanishing Cream you have the perfect powder with the perfect base.

Use a soft puff and lightly dust powder all over the face. Don't dab. Small hard pads are wasteful and do not give a fine smooth powdered surface.

PLANTING OF PEARS

By G. O. Sherrard, B.Sc.

THE pear is by no means as easy to grow as the apple in our climate, owing to the fact that our spring and summer temperatures are just below the optimum for its proper development. At the same time, by using the extra warmth that is obtainable by planting on a wall of southerly aspect, even the choicest dessert varieties can be ripened successfully, and there are certain hardy kinds which thrive in the open garden. The flowering period of the tree is earlier than that of the apple, so that it is more likely to meet with frost or low temperatures when in bloom, and this is one of the factors accounting for a poor set of fruit. Other factors affecting the setting of pears are the presence of a suitable pollinating variety, and the nutrition of the tree. No variety of pear is completely fertile with its own pollen, and certain varieties are bad pollinators, notably Beurré Diel, Beurré d'Amaulis, Pitmaston Duchess and Catillac, all of which have an irregular number of chromosomes in their cells (triploids). In order to ensure a good set of fruit on a particular tree it is necessary to have within 100 yards or so another variety, with a normal number of chromosomes in flower at the same time, and the weather good enough for the bees to fly and the pollen to germinate. In small town gardens close together, and containing a few pear trees, the conditions for cross pollination are usually favourable, providing the weather is good. In country gardens it might easily be otherwise, if only two or three varieties were grown and the garden was isolated.

FUNGUS

The pear appears to need a higher level of nutrition than the apple, possibly due to the fact that in the wild state it is a much larger tree. Garden pears are dwarfed by working them on the quince stock; the huge over-vigorous pear trees that one often sees in gardens have either been worked on the pear stock or have formed roots above the union of stock and scion. It is of the greatest importance when planting to have this point of union above the level of the soil, as these over-vigorous trees are rarely productive. Pears on the quince stock are not over-vigorous, and are very fruitful, providing they receive proper manurial treatment. It has been found that pear trees on walls bear the heaviest crops and carry the finest fruit where the border in which they are planted is maintained in a high state of fertility by growing in it well manured crops of early potatoes or other vegetables. On the other hand, if the border is devoted to strong growing herbaceous plants or allowed to fall down to weeds, the pears get very small, and develop cracks in the skin owing to lack of food and moisture. The fungus which causes black scab or patches on the skins of pears also causes cracking of the fruit, and greatly reduces its size. In addition it adversely affects the cropping of the tree by interfering with the proper functioning of the leaves. Pear Scab is very prevalent in our damp climate and unless it is controlled pears cannot be successfully grown. Fortunately its control is easy, easier than is the control of apple scab on the apple, because the foliage of pears will tolerate Bordeaux Mixture, which is the best spray to use (see Department of Agriculture Leaflet No. 84).

VARIETIES

The pear tree, owing to the freedom with which it develops fruit spurs is very amenable to training into various shapes for wall planting, such as single or double cordons, fans or horizontally trained trees. Old Irish gardens often contain wonderful examples of skilful training. In the open it is usually grown in this country as an open centred bush, but in France a pyramid-shaped tree is preferred. On walls over 6ft. in height and where space is limited the cordon is the most useful type of tree, or where there is room for it the fan, on low walls the horizontal training must be adopted.

The following varieties of pears will succeed quite well without the assistance of a wall in the Dublin district. Dessert:—Buerrè Hardy, Conference, Louise Bonne of Jersey, Pitmaston Duchess, William Bon Chretien, Jargonelle. Cooking:—Fertility, Beurrè Clairgeau, Catillac. Where a south wall is available some or all of the following richly flavoured dessert varieties should be planted on it:—Doyenne du Comice, Beurrè Superfin, Glou Morceau, Beurre Diel, Josephine de Malines, Thompson, Winter Nelis.

The pear is not a fruit that can be recommended for commercial cultivation in this country, but for the private garden where the necessary attention can be given to it no fruit repays the owner better.

WEDDINGS

Magill—Franklin.—The wedding took place recently of David Cecil Magill, L.D.S., R.C.S., third son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Magill, 16 Windsor road, Rathmines, and Miss Helen Norah Franklin, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Franklin, 2 Oakland Drive, Rathgar. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. W. Ridgeway, of St. Jude's, Perth, assisted by Rev. L. A. Elliott, at Zion Church, Rathgar. The bride was given away by her father, and was attended by two bridesmaids—Miss A. K. Magill, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Carolyn Franklin, niece of the bride. Mr. R. W. Franklin was best man.

Brennan—McGill.—The marriage took place at St. Kevin's Church, Harrington street, Dublin, with Nuptial Mass and Papal blessing, of Rev. E. W. Mansfield, C.C., officiating, of Mr. Con Brennan, son of Mrs. M. Brennan and the late Mr. Thomas Brennan, Kehlin street, Dublin, and Miss Mary McGill, daughter of Mrs. B. McGill and the late Mr. Michael McGill, Milestown, Castlebellingham. The bridesmaid was Mrs. J. Kelly, sister of the bride, and Mr. John Brennan, brother of the groom, was best man.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

World Affairs

World in Trance. By Leopold Schwarzschild. Hamish Hamilton. 12/6 net.

HERR SCHWARZSCHILD, who shares, oddly enough, the opinions of Lord Vansittart on some important aspects of ethnology, differs from him both in the scope and in the method of his history. Lord Vansittart, in his best-known work, gave us an oblique bird's-eye view of European history from Arminius to the present day; the Thirty Years War flashed past in a paragraph, and, with the improvement of communications, the Napoleonic campaigns took only half a line. Herr Schwarzschild, in the painstaking tradition of German scholarship, confines himself to twenty years, what he calls "the period of the armistice," from 1918 to 1939, and his book is roughly five times as long as Lord Vansittart's.

The central theme is in its implications the same in both books, but is different in form. Lord Vansittart deduces from his glimpses of history a semi-mystical doctrine of immanent guilt and endemic wickedness; Herr Schwarzschild is solidly materialistic, stressing the importance of environment and education, and the fact that like causes will continue to produce like results.

The first part of "World in France" is well worth reading, being the best brief account (sixty pages) yet published of the peace negotiations of 1918-19. The author has drawn heavily on Ray Stannard Baker's "Life of Woodrow Wilson," on "The Intimate Papers of Colonel House," and on German and other material to produce a terse, lucid narrative, full of dramatic as well as political interest.

Remaining chapters are little better than most of the "What-Went-Wrong" books published since 1930. The mistakes which have been pointed out, with varying emphasis, a score of times already, are pointed out again, and the accumulated "incidents" of the 'thirties are as wearisome in iteration as they have been terrible in their consequences. Indeed, Herr Schwarzschild himself seems to become apathetic in his last chapters, and adopts the tone of a lawyer who, having proved his case in the cross-examination of the principal witnesses, has now to make a final speech for the benefit of a sleepy jury.

The foreword, by Professor Brogan, is pointedly written, sarcastic at the expense of liberal journalists, and a concise expression of Herr Schwarzschild's main theme—a theme to which Professor Brogan has already given a more polemical shape in his widely read pamphlet, "Is Innocence Enough?"

They Built a Nation. By Ruth Adam and Dorothy Noad. Chapman and Hall. 5/- net.

NOT only for grown-ups, but for the youngsters of to-day, whose minds will, in later years, find their background chiefly in the events of the last four years, America, with its history, civilisation, resources, institutions, and world-wide concerns, is certain to be a subject of absorbing interest. Its import on the life of modern Europe and Asia will inevitably make it an engaging study for juveniles.

In this little volume they will find the epic story of a great Continent's discovery, its earliest inhabitants, its colonisation, development, and expansion, and all the great industrial, engineering, and scientific achievements that have contributed to its prosperity. To compress the salient features of so vast a period within two hundred pages demanded a nice sense of proportion in the space allotted to particular eras of American progress. That has been admirably attained, giving the book the merit that makes it a picturesque record of the rise to power of a mighty nation and the men who helped to build and govern it, including the historic episodes in which Franklin D. Roosevelt has participated.

As a manual for use in the classroom, teachers will find it helpful by availing of the questions covering the content of each chapter.

Appeasement's Child. By Thomas J. Hamilton. Gollancz. 7/6 net.

THIS is a first-class piece of reporting and of interpretation by a distinguished American journalist. Books on the current history of Spain, especially those written by eye-witnesses of events in recent years, have been few and far between. The civil war brought forth a spate of books, good, bad, and indifferent, many of them tendencious, and most of them based on considerable ignorance, but since then a blanket of silence has fallen over one of the most war-torn countries of Europe. Not merely did Mr. Hamilton live in Spain during the early years of the present war, but he has also lived in Chile, and has a solid grasp of the Spanish and Latin-American traditions. Like all good journalists, too, he has contacts with all classes of society, and if he occasionally seems too dogmatic or too sweeping in his claims, nevertheless his book is none the less valuable for his courageous interpretation of events.

Meet the Americans. By a Man in the Street. Martin Secker and Warburg. 7/6 net.

WRITTEN by an Englishman whose knowledge of the United States of America is based on considerable first-hand experience and detailed study, this book is intended to be read by the peoples of Great Britain and the United States with the view to a mutual understanding and appreciation of each other. Frankness is the keynote of the text, and the author maintains a nice balance between his admiration for American youth and vitality and the British qualities of balance and maturity. Goodwill between the two nations is now high, he says, but criticism is not absent, and there are signs of rocks ahead. On the successful comradeship of the two countries depends, not only the rapid conclusion of the war, but the success of the peace. Britain must make sure this time that America comes into the peace and joins in the reconstruction following victory.

Polish Architecture

Glimpses of Polish Architecture. By Roman Soltyoski. Standard Art Books. 6/- net.

THE unhappy events of September, 1939, which resulted in the outbreak of war, have given Poland a publicity value which she never previously possessed and there have been a flood of books about her history, her art, her customs and her people. The present volume, dealing with the architecture of the country, which without the war almost certainly would not have been written, treats all phases of her architecture, ancient and modern, civic buildings and dwelling houses, working quarters and recreation facilities, interior and exterior design, and the book is illustrated throughout with numerous excellent photographs. Most interesting to the average reader, perhaps, is the part which deals with the development of the modern dwelling house for the small family.

Backgrounds of Easter Week

The History of the Citizen Army. By R. M. Fox. James Duffy. 8/- net.

"THOSE who knew Dublin of the beginning of this century will find their memories refreshed by Mr. Fox's vivid narrative—those who did not will undoubtedly be surprised."

As a close observer of the events which led up to the insurrection of 1916, the present writer found himself the victim of conflicting loyalties. A convinced supporter of the forces which sought to bring about social reforms by constitutional means, he found himself drawn step by step, into active sympathy with those whose patience had been exhausted by the repeated failures of leaders and organisations that endeavoured to remedy the evils of widely spread poverty and slum-life by means of peaceful persuasion. With lively recollections of those days of doubt and hesitation, he now can endorse the publisher's foreword—as quoted above—to Mr. Fox's reflections on the events which culminated in, and followed on, the rising of Easter Week, 1916.

Dedicated to "The Rank and File" of the Citizen Army's survivors, the book presents a frankly partisan case. It is an effort not only to explain, but to justify, the outlook and methods of those who founded and controlled the fighting arm of Liberty Hall. Nevertheless, it is a contribution to the stormy and confused history of Dublin in the twentieth century which no student of Irish political events can afford to neglect. The story told is at once simple, vividly-written and revealing. With considerable skill the author manages to survey the main political and economic factors whose convergence gave birth to "Syndicalist" (sympathetic-strike and "tainted goods") methods of Liberty Hall, and ultimately to a military organisation, which—as the centre to which other revolutionary movements converged, and from which they derived new driving force—changed the whole course of Irish history.

Personalities

Much of the book's contents treat of events and personalities with which the majority of readers already are familiar, but against some unfamiliar backgrounds. Other pages introduce stories of individual exploits and contacts not hitherto recorded. Throughout, the author's work bears evidence of personal contacts with surviving members of "the rank and file" of industrious research, and of a desire to be scrupulously fair to all who risked their lives or reputations in support of labour and revolutionary nationalism.

As the story proceeds some new sidelights are thrown on the actions and attitudes of revolutionary leaders in moments of crisis. Larkin, as "incomparably the finest orator"; Madame Markievicz, as the personification of "noblesse oblige", but most uncompromising advocate of extreme measures; Captain White, as knight-errant and social philosopher; Michael Mallon, as the chief of staff who pulled things together at critical moments—all have their pedestals. But, as Mr. Fox saw him, the outstanding personality of all was James Connolly. By clear implication the author conveys his view that, without Connolly, there would have been no "Easter Week." Even when the I.R.B. counselled prudence and leaders of the Volunteers openly opposed violent action, Connolly's cold determination, his forces of intellect and character, swept aside all counsels of caution. While the author stops short of saying that without Connolly the opponents of self government would have crushed the revolutionary forces, that conclusion—which has been reached by other observers—is implicit in the author's line of thought.

Serious Omissions

Mr. Fox's work is not free from serious defects. In the interests of historical accuracy one of these may be mentioned in some detail. The body under whose auspices the Citizen Army was conceived was not —as the author supposes—the Civic League. That organisation, like the Citizen's Army itself, had its origin in the unsuccessful efforts of a body of citizens, who were sympathetic with, but detached from, labour interests. Founded on the initiative of Professor Tom Kettle, the Industrial Peace Committee's efforts were directed to the discovery of some half-way house between the organised forces of employers, under the leadership of Mr. William Martin Murphy, and the extremist demands of Mr. James Larkin and his associates.

It was a strangely mixed company, including citizens so far apart as the then Dean of the Chapel Royal, the Rev. R. M. Gwynn, leading Ministers of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, some employers whose sympathies leaned towards Labour, "A.E.," Sheehy Skeffington, Patrick Colum, Sarah Harrison, Professor Rudmose-Brown, Constance Markievicz, and other representatives of detached interests. The committee met night after night in the Mansion House. Met by the non possumus attitude of the organised employers, who persistently refused to meet representatives of Liberty Hall, the committee's active sympathies turned gradually towards labour interests, who had indicated willingness to meet the Employers' Committee. Finally, towards the end of December, it was proposed that the committee should abandon its position of neutrality and openly declare itself on the side of Liberty Hall.

Captain White's Part

The culminating point arrived when Captain White outlined his ideas for the formation of a citizen army, as a means by which to bring discipline into the distracted ranks of labour. He gave the assurance that the plan would exclude any idea of military activities. Discussion proceeded until near midnight, and it became clear that the Committee unanimously favoured Captain White's proposal. At that point it became the present writer's unpleasant duty, as chairman of the meeting, to rule the motion out of order, since the Lord Mayor—Mr. Lorcan Sherlock—had granted the use of the Mansion House on the strict understanding that the Committee would maintain a position of neutrality. Then it was resolved that the meeting should at once adjourn to other premises; but where could such premises be found?

The difficulty was solved by the Rev. R. M. Gwynn, who led a midnight procession of us down Dawson street, through the Fellows' Garden, to his rooms in Trinity College. There Captain White expounded his proposals, backed them with a substantial cheque, which, with other contributions, was handed to Professor Houston, of the College of Science, as the first treasure of Citizen Army funds.

The Civic League

Save in one respect the rest of the story—Captain White's first meeting with Connolly during Larkin's absence in England—is told with reasonable accuracy in Mr. Fox's book. What he failed to place on record is the fact that, on reflection, a group of those who had been present at the Trinity College meeting thought it well to direct their energies to housing and its allied social problems. Hence came the Civic League.

Lest it be objected that the relation of such facts lies outside the reviewer's province, it may be pleaded that some measure of justice is due to employers and professional men, who incurred no small amount of odium because they refused to be blind to the sufferings of their fellow-citizens. Let it be added that many well-disposed citizens were also to be found among members of the employers' organisation. Their influence, though ineffective, was exerted in favour of conference and conciliation.

Had Mr. Fox been less indiscriminate in his judgments his book would have been a safer guide to younger students of Dublin life. Communities cannot usefully be analysed in simple terms of black and white!

An Essay in Faith

Renascence. By Nicodemus. Faber and Faber. 8/6 net.

"MIDNIGHT HOUR," the first book which "Nicodemus" published under that pseudonym, was an unedited journal. This book, on the other hand, is the product of a long and painful process of synthesis. It is unlikely, as the author himself is aware, to appeal on the same grounds as its predecessor. "Appeal," in fact, is almost the last thing it does, except to those who already share its author's need for "a new mystic." He subtitles it "an essay in faith"; and since the word "essay" implies exertion, the description is just. The sense of effort is constantly present, and faith does not seem sufficient to bridge the gaps between his rather tormented thoughts.

This characteristic shows up in the way the book is written. The chapter on "Personality" gives the (possibly erroneous) impression that the author has gathered together a number of statements by various authorities on the problem of personality and character, and has woven them together in a way which disguises the fact that their connexions, if any, are remote and obscure. For one thing in such discussions it is extremely difficult to be sure how far the meanings which two authors attach to the same terms coincide. Here he is heavy going diversified by leaps in the dark.

In "The Masque of May," where it is perfectly clear what he is talking about, his method is similar, consisting of a string of quotations from the most obvious sources in pre-Renaissance English poetry. Linking up with this, his analysis, in "Religion and the Renaissance" of the motives of Florentine art, is stimulating and convincing. But when he is readily approachable, as in "The Two Christianities" and "The Skin Game: An Open Letter," he seems to be retailing commonplaces, which casts some suspicion on his more recondite lines of argument. And it is doubtful whether the insertion, cheek by jowl with the rest, of "The Home Guard," a fragment of almost pure reportage, is either legitimate or successful.

He quotes copiously from Rilke, Kierkegaard and Martin Buber's "I and Thou." Those who find this line of modern thought attractive in itself, will probably find "Renascence" helpful: but those who need to be coaxed into interest may wish that he had erected on these profound foundations a less fragmentary edifice.

Light Reading

Green Hands. By Barbara Whitton. Faber. 7/6 net.

THIS is a thoroughly entertaining story of the life of Britain's girls in the Land Army. Barbara—the writer—and Anne leave their comfortable homes to work on a bleak and isolated farm, where life is a round of back-breaking toil, relieved but little by the cheerless comfort of the farmer's house. The author, who was 18 at the time, tells her story delightfully; for her sense of humour is strong enough to overcome, at least in retrospect, all her discomforts. The account of the social life at Spital Tongues—particularly the "mashing" of the calf-like Walter and his pals—is hilariously funny; and even when Barbara later gets a new and better berth and a new companion—Anne having withdrawn, defeated—her neat description and shrewdly-noted detail give unflagging enjoyment. Above all, the story has a strong flavour of authenticity, which helps to place it far ahead of most humorous writing. A delicious book which it is a pleasure to recommend.

Christopher and Christina. By Margaret Morrison. Hutchinson. 9/6 net.

A brother and sister who are twins and, owing to the circumstance of their birth, are separated shortly after their arrival in this world, form a plot round which to weave a good tale. Christopher is adopted by a wealthy manufacturer, and Christina by the wife of a village schoolmaster who longs for a child. Their upbringing in vastly different circles, their meeting, and the influence Christina's brother has on his sister's love-affairs cause plenty of tense situations. The other personalities in the novel are well drawn, especially "Madame," in whose very exclusive gown shop Christina finds the stage for most of the romance in her life. The end is unusual, and the death of Christopher and of Christina's husband as well leave the book somewhat bare towards the end. Such vital characters and so sad a finish are none too frequent in a novel of to-day.

Restless Heritage. By Lady Jean Verney. Hutchinson. 9/6 net.

There is something of the weird and macabre in this novel. It concerns the selfishness of a young man whose marriage with a beautiful Cornish girl turns out to be illegal, so that their son is illegitimate. He does not attempt to right the matter when this is discovered, but marries again, this time in his own social sphere. In the meantime the boy, who follows in his father's tastes as a brilliant historian and archæologist, makes his own career, but his life is darkened with a hate of the parent whose baseness has tainted his existence. The tracing of the diverse threads of their lives, until they most strangely meet, makes a fine, if rather melancholy, tale.

Slade. By Warwick Deeping. Cassell. 8/6 net.

As a study of personalities this book is more than interesting, and the treatment of the two main people is satisfying to a high degree. "Slade" is the erring husband of Mrs. Pomeroy, who, after his involuntary internment, engages him as a servant and attempts to rule and order his life completely, much in the manner of all domineering women. But her erstwhile husband, as Mrs. Pomeroy discovers, has much strength behind his meekness, and his finer nature eventually triumphs. The manner in which "Slade" attains all that he had hoped for, and more, through sheer strength of character and kindliness, and the downfall of the overbearing wife, are told in a manner which is in keeping with the reputation of this novelist.

The Returning Heart. By Dorothy Charques. Hamish Hamilton. 9/6 net.

This is a sequel to Mrs. Charques's earlier historical novel, "Time's Harvest." It picks up the fortunes of the Hill family where they were dropped by "Time's Harvest" in 1859, and carries them up to 1881 and the first Boer War. Although a few incidents suggest Dickens very strongly, the general tone of this rather over-long book is vividly reminiscent of Walpole's "Herries" saga. It is impressively written in a curious off-hand style, but there is little relief from the general atmosphere of gloom and cruelty.

A Picture Book

By Frank O'Connor

WHEN I asked the boots in Roscrea the way to Monaincha, pronouncing it as it's spelled, he said he'd never heard of it. "Would it be Monaheensha?" he asked, and, of course, Monaheensha it was, and already it began to assume an existence outside the pages of a guide book. We passed the ruined church of Roscrea, the west wall of which is all that remains of it, when the woodbine-coloured light was bringing out the gold in the wet, brown, spongy sandstone, and the churchyard sulked behind in a deep cavernous sea-green light.

It is a pup of Cormac's chapel; a porch set in an arcade of four arches, each with a pediment that echoes the pediment of the porch and what (before they lowered the roof and stuck on the little belfry) must have been a high gable; the whole, as the businessmen say, enclosed between two moulded corner pilasters. It is fearfully worn, for the chalky stone laps up the rain like blotting paper, and the saint in the pediment and the heads on the capitals have almost crumbled away, but it has something of the elegance of Cashel; there is the same sense of a civilised life behind it. The exterior arches are ornamented, the inner ones plain; the variation is Irish, the balance European.

We left the Main road and turned along a bumpy bog road, and there came to us over the rises a procession of high blue and orange creels, laden with turf, the heads of the little asses forced level with the shafts. It was drawing on to dusk, the fields were filled with brown rushes, and where the ground rose out of the bog to right and left were clumps of beeches, dense and solid, black with rain and bronzed with mast. The smell of the burning turf clung like mist to the ground.

Where the road bent, overhung with beeches, there was a wicket gate in a demesne wall. The sagging wall had pulled it awry till it looked like a mouth in a paralysed face. Quite suddenly I had a vision of a winter night glittering with frost, and a cart with its little candle lamp, rattling home from Roscrea with a child behind covering its head for fear of the ghosts. I saw it quite plainly because I was the child, and I was terrified by the ghosts. I stopped and said to Herself, "This is a place they see ghosts in." I didn't know that the field where the rushes grew was once a wide lake, and that the church we were going to see stood on an island called the Island of the Living, where people were supposed never to die.

The only one of the island churches that remains stood on a hillock amid the boglands, with a wall of beeches about it; three bare cottage gables, the one that faced us touched with the watery woodbine-coloured light till it was one tone with the trees. A muddy lane led to the little Protestant graveyard where the graves were marked by little flat slabs of sandstone off the church roof or tiny ornaments from the thirteenth century windows. The doorway has been restored and botched, but still has something of the atmosphere of the place; a touch of Egypt, of the hooded falcon in the high-shouldered pilasters, unrelieved by capitals, gripped as in a steel band by the impost.

It framed a view of the beautiful little chancel arch, woman-curved, with smooth shafts and scalloped capitals and a web of smoothly-flowing superficial ornament. It was the colour of red bronze in the evening light, and behind it the little thirteenth century window opened on the clump of sunlit beeches. The cold drove us away; the penetrating cold that comes out of half-reclaimed land. We had disturbed the haunt of some yokels who played hide-and-seek about the building. When we came out it was as if the church were islanded again. Where the lake had been was a sea of mist.

We came back next morning when the sun was shining brightly, and the gaily-coloured carts were clattering back to the bog, but nothing seemed to change the uncompromising spirit of the old churches

Current for the Country

It is pleasant to learn that the problem of the electrification of the twenty-six counties has not been overlooked during these years of war. In the course of his election campaign two months ago Mr. de Valera hinted at an extension of the electricity supply, and casually mentioned that £10,000,000, at the least, would be its cost. Further details now are available. Dail Eireann will be presented with a bill, enabling the Electricity Supply Board to embark upon a ten-year programme of rural electrification, which will extend the benefit of light and power to the remotest parts of the country. This programme will entail the establishment of several generating stations — whether hydro-electric, as on the Shannon and Liffey, or operated by coal, as at the Pigeon House, is not mentioned. We need not waste words upon our approval of these plans, so far as they have been revealed. Ever since the Shannon Scheme came into operation, many years ago now, the demand for current has increased by leaps and bounds; certainly, it has surpassed the widest expectations of most people—if not of its promoters. The fact remains, however, that tens of thousands of Irish households still are without current. The network of the Shannon Scheme does not extend to hundreds of the larger villages, and thousands of the smaller villages: so far as heat and light are concerned, these places are as primitive as they were a couple of hundred years ago. Another war may occur within the lifetime of people who are suffering from the rigours of the present one; and it will be a sorry thing if the privations that Irish citizens are suffering nowadays, through no fault of their own, are repeated within their lifetime. If only to avert the discomfort of war conditions, it is evident that the electrification of Ireland shall be undertaken with the least possible delay; but there are even stronger reasons, based upon the needs of peace-time, why the E.S.B.'s scheme should be taken in hand. The experience of other countries has been that electrification means production: it makes for greater efficiency on the farm. Our own chief interest therein lies in the fact that it will render rural life more convenient, and, therefore, more agreeable, to the men, women and children who live on the land. It may persuade them to remain there, rather than to emigrate—in that terrible, step-by-step process—from the country to the provincial towns, from the provincial towns to Dublin, and from Dublin to the large world outside. Our hope is that this forthcoming bill not only will be treated with becoming seriousness, but will be sufficiently ambitious. If it represents a genuine effort to harness the Erne and other available rivers, we think that it will receive a hearty welcome from all people who matter, and, whatever its cost may be, will experience an easy passage through the Oireachtas. Mr. de Valera's estimate of a total cost of £10,000,000 may be, as is suggested, eminently modest: £20,000,000 may be a closer approximation to the facts. The money, however, will be well spent if it lightens the burden of the farmer and generally improves the condition of a majority of the citizens of the twenty-six counties. There may be queries in the Dail about the manner of its spending; but the price will not be grudged.

Post-war Africa

The organisers of the post-war world will have to face one of the most difficult tasks in history. In general, the immediate desire will be to make a plan by which further wars may be kept at bay, at least for a few generations; the next consideration of every nation will be to assure the material well-being of its own citizens; and, linked up with these things, there will be schemes for the rehabilitation of countries which have suffered through the war, for the development of the backward nations so that they may take a useful and co-operative part in the world, and so on. The future of the various colonies in Africa is a subsidiary, perhaps, but still an important question. France, before the war, had been the most "modernistic" of the colonising nations in the establishment of an amicable relationship between her African possessions and the mother country; for the French African empire was almost a part of France. Natives were given equal status and opportunities with Frenchmen, and the regular working of inspectors, whose reports were published, brought abuses systematically to the public notice. Relations between the British colonies and the homeland, however, had been uneasy. The original colonisers were bent, unashamedly, upon the exploitation of the colonies for their own benefit; but later a more high-minded view had gained ground, and in the years preceding the war the position improved considerably. White administrators were chosen with care, and generally worked conscientiously for the good of the native peoples. Yet, in spite of the good-will of the administrator, he was, inevitably, restricted by the system; and the system was still directed mainly to profit. Sir Edward Grigg, sometime Governor of Kenya, made the revealing statement a few years before the war: "We have this fact that, on the average, out of the total revenue of the African colonies, 75 per cent. is spent in a manner which inures directly to our benefit every year. We unquestionably do very well out of these colonies." Africans naturally are resentful that the wealth of their country should not be used more to their own advantage; and, since any man labouring under an economic wrong seeks a political remedy, they are anxious that they should have control of their own affairs. A general promise of home rule for every State when it is sufficiently advanced will not satisfy them—for who is to be judge of the proper time? Yet it seems clear that the white nations cannot withdraw from Africa precipitately. They may, with advantage, give the native peoples equal opportunities and status in administrative posts, and steadily increasing representation; but to retire at once might be calamitous to the Africans themselves. Who is to say that, if white vested interests are expelled, the educated native will not establish his own vested interests? Will he treat his less advanced brothers any better than they are treated now? A new tyrant is always worse than an old tyrant—or, as the country saying puts it, "the divil you know is better than the divil you don't know." The well-being and development of backward peoples is, indeed, as the Covenant of the League of Nations put it, "a sacred trust of civilisation." Civilisation cannot allow the job to be botched.

NEW FACTORY

A new canning factory is under construction in Cabra, Dublin, which is expected to be partly in operation by the end of the present year.

Mr. J. A. Lawlor, Chairman of Messrs. Batchelor and Co. (Ireland), Ltd., yesterday told the shareholders at the annual general meeting that the progress of building operations has continued apace, and that they hoped to be in occupation of a large section of the factory before the end of 1943. This would not affect the working of the present factory at Athy, which was further improved during the past year to cope with the huge crop of peas expected from increased acreage laid down this season, he added.

The original site for the proposed new factory was at Santry, Co. Dublin, but this has been abandoned in favour of the more suitable site at Cabra West. The development or disposal of the Santry site would be left in the hands of the directors.

ARMY COMMISSIONS

The following have been appointed Second Lieutenants in the Reserve of Officers:—H. Cairns, T. O'Leary, P. Woodgate, H. W. V. Thompson, A. P. P. Eaton, J. C. Cassidy, R. P. Cleere, M. R. White, W. Culhane, C. F. K. A. Bourke, J. F. Carragher, H. Crowe, J. R. McHale, P. P. O'Reilly, I. G. McEvoy, A. P. Simpson, S. O. de Barra, J. Creed, D. L. Murphy, J. J. O'Connor, P. S. Quigley.

L.D.F. SHOOTING CHAMPIONSHIPS

The L.D.F. national rifle marksmanship championships will be decided at the Curragh to-morrow, beginning at 11 a.m. Ninety-six sharpshooters, the crack shots of every L.D.F. area in the country, will compete. Mr. Oscar Traynor, Minister for Defence, will present the prizes. Mr. F. Aiken, Minister for Co-Ordination of Defensive Measures, and Lieutenant-General D. McKenna, Chief of Staff, will also be present.

Capitol Re-opens.—The Capitol Theatre will re-open on Monday next with a stage show, "Mirth, Melody and Music," with a ballet by Cepta Cullen. The Serenaders in selections from Strauss, Anne Wilmer in spiritual songs, Florence Hayes, Sue Millar, Arthur Hold-White, boy soprano; the Capitol Orchestra and dancing girls. The film will be "Something to Shout About," with Don Ameche.

Big Sprint at Curragh

SOME of the speediest sprinters in the country will be in opposition in the Rockingham Handicap at the Curragh to-day, and, as the race bears a very open appearance, wagering should take a wide range. Camfield was a good winner before being beaten by the much-improved Bonbon at Phœnix Park, and he is taken to score again. Chief danger may come from Leanore and the better of Col. Blake's pair, Crackerjack and Bardic. Selections:

Juvenile Plate—Coup de Grace.
Mountjoy Plate—Knockderk.
Goff Sale Stakes—Loaded Dice.
Rockingham Handicap—Camfield.

Leger Trial at Ascot

By BIRDSATCHER

THE highlight of to-day's Ascot programme will be the White Waltham Stakes, which will bring into opposition Straight Deal and Why Hurry —winners of this year's Derby and Oaks, respectively. Miss Paget's colt won the premier classic with a great run in the last furlong of a fast-run race. He is taken to beat Why Hurry, and the race should throw some light on St. Leger prospects. Selections:—

2.30—Birdsather—1.0, Fairy Queen c. (nap); 1.30, Historic; 2.0, Doushenka; 2.30, Straight Deal; 3.0, Vibi; 3.30, Lady Maderty f.; 4.0, Bodsey Boy; 4.30, Easter Bonnet; Double—Fairy Queen c. and Straight Deal.

Travelling Correspondent—1.0, Fairy Queen c.; 1.30, Hilatory; 2.0, Doushenka; 2.30, Why Hurry (nap); 3.0, Pennyfare; 3.30, Lady Maderty f.; 4.0, Bodsey Boy; 4.30, Magic Red. Double—Why Hurry and Bodsey Boy.

Ingle and Smith Win Quickly

By P. D. MacWEENEY.

By way of a pleasant change, professional boxing was properly conducted last night at Tolka Park, and the people who paid for their seats saw the proceedings in comfort. In the principal bout of the evening Jimmy Ingle, who will shortly be challenging Tommy Armour for the Irish welter-weight championship, had no difficulty in disposing of Jim Doran, of Belfast, the referee stopping it in the third round. Ingle hit far too hard for a plucky opponent, and, even though he was inclined to use the inside of the glove, he was clearly on top when the fight was stopped.

Jimmy Smith gave another example of his hitting power in beating a strong Belfast lad, Billy Donnelly, in the fourth round. Choosing the moment to attack, Smith found his opponent a tough proposition for nearly three rounds, but just before the bell in the third he landed a succession of perfectly-timed punches, which put Donnelly down, and really ended the affair. Donnelly came up for the fourth round, but one right to the jaw ended it, Donnelly's seconds throwing in the towel as the count started.

Bantam-weight — Jimmy Warnock (Belfast) k.o. Billy Phelan (Dublin) in 3rd round.

Feather-weight—Joe Foley (Dublin) and Harry McAuley (Belfast) boxed a draw.

Light-weight—Jimmy Smith (Clonmel) beat Billy Donnelly (Belfast), retired in 4th round.

Welter-weight—Jimmy Ingle (Dublin) beat Jim Doran (Belfast), stopped in 3rd round; Joe Armour (Belfast) k.o. W. Miller (Belfast) in 2nd round.

Feather-weight—John Ingle (Dublin) k.o. Siki O'Neill (Dublin) in 5th round.

JUNIOR TENNIS

There was a surprising finish in the second girls' singles championship semi-final at Fitzwilliam yesterday. Miss E. Hallinan, having won the first set 6-3, missed a match-point at 5-3 in the second set, which she eventually lost 7-5. Miss Meenan gave her no chance to redeem herself in the third, losing only one game. Miss M. Hallinan's defeat by Miss D. Millen was a reversal of the result of their meeting at Cork last week. J. Hackett qualified for the boys' final. Results:—

Boys' Singles Championship—Semi-Final—J. D. Hackett beat J. C. Davis, 6-0, 7-5.

Girls' Singles Championship—Semi-Finals—D. Miley beat M. Hallinan, 6-2, 6-4; M. Meenan beat E. Hallinan, 3-6, 7-5, 6-1.

Under 15 Boys' Singles Championship.—Semi-Final—R. Davis beat J. Fitzpatrick, 8-6, 8-6.

Under 15 Girls' Singles Championship—Semi-Final—Mary Roche beat H. Manning, 6-2, 6-2.

Championship Finals: 2 o'c.—Mary A. Roche v. Monica Moran, followed by J. Hackett v. McCabe; Miriam Meenan v. Dorothy Miley; R. Davis v. M. Lawler. Handicaps: 11.0—D. Millen and C. Roiger v. A. Orr and M. Seale; W. Kerr and B. Law v. C. Goodbody and S. Ronaldson. Other handicap events start at 2.30 and 3.0.

Percy Cup—C. Goodbody, Men's Championship—P. McCaffrey; runner-up, J. Dargan. Women's Championship—Miss G. Smith; runner-up, Mrs. P. Cowle. Mixed Doubles Championship—J. Dargan and Miss E. Quinn. Women's Doubles Championship—Misses C. Smith and N. Skinner. Men's Handicap Doubles—P. McCaffrey and J. Tarrant. Women's Handicap Doubles—Misses C. Draper and E. Gipson. Mixed Handicap Doubles —P. McCaffrey and Miss L. Smyth.

Barrow Drainage Rates Move

A deputation from the Executive of the Barrow Drainage Ratepayers' Organisation was received at Leinster House yesterday by a number of Dail deputies from Leix-Offaly, Carlow-Kildare, and some Independent deputies. The deputies agreed to notify the Minister for Justice, through Deputy Flanagan, of their intention to wait on him, with a view to having pending seizures for Barrow drainage rates stopped until the forthcoming Drainage Bill has been passed in the Dail.

A letter was read from Mr. M. Donnellan, T.D., leader of the Farmers' Party, promising every possible support.

Eighty Million Merger

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

TWO of the most important building societies in the United Kingdom, the Abbey Road and the National, have decided to amalgamate and form one society to be called the Abbey National Building Society.

Both are old-established concerns, the National being in its ninety-fourth year and the Abbey Road in its sixty-fourth year. The united assets will exceed £80,000,000, and the combined reserve funds and undivided profits will total over £6,800,000. The new combination will rank as the second largest building society, the first being the Halifax, which has assets totalling over £126,000,000. During the discussions which have led to the merger the important part that building societies will be called upon to play in the work of reconstruction after the war has been emphasised. As rates of interest to shareholders and terms for borrowers are practically identical, there will be a minimum of disorganisation in bringing about the merger. The two boards of directors will be merged into one, no compensation for loss of office, therefore, being necessary. Sir Harold Bellman, chairman and managing director of the Abbey Road, will be chairman of the new society, and Mr. Stanley C. Ramsey, chairman of the National, vice-chairman.

Increased dividends are announced by a number of comparatively small industrial concerns engaged in widely different activities. This is partly a result of war work, but in other cases the dividends probably represent increased spending capacity on the part of the public.

Oxley Engineering, which was registered as a public company in 1937 and has a capital of £100,000, is to pay 15 per cent., less tax, for the year to June 30 last. The dividend since 1939 has been 12½ p.c., with the exception of 1940, when 10 p.c. was distributed. The profits have substantially covered the dividends in past years. Only a limited market exists for the 5/- shares, with the price around 10/- and the last business recorded at 9/-.

Then there is Gale Lister and Co., with a capital of £75,000 in 4/- shares. This is a 1936 registration, when the company acquired a business of wine and spirit merchants and ale and stout bottlers. Recently this company has directed much attention to the manufacture of wine cocktails. The directors announce a final dividend of 11⅓ p.c. for the year to last February, making, with the interim, 17½ p.c., less tax, for the year, against 15 p.c. for 1942, and 13⅓ p.c. for 1941. Here, again, the market in the shares is rather a restricted one, with the price of the 4/- fully-paid shares around 7/6.

Hector Powe, Ltd., is a well-known firm in London, of tailors and outfitters. It became a public concern in 1938, and has an issued share capital of £145,650, of which £78,650 is in Ordinary shares of 2/- each. The business prospered before the war, and substantial annual dividends were paid. The dividends were kept at 15 p.c. annually, but in some years there was an extra cash bonus of 2½ p.c., also a 10 p.c. scrip bonus in 1936, and again in 1938. When the war came difficulties increased, and no dividend were paid for two years to March, 1942. Dividend on the 5½ p.c. Preference capital went into arrears, but these were made good in November last year. Now the directors announce a 5 p.c. Ordinary dividend for last year. The 2/- shares have recently changed hands at 3/3 each.

Net profit of Marston Thompson and Evershed, Limited, brewers, wine and spirit merchants, is slightly higher at £95,165 (against £92,429). Two dividends totalling 20 p.c. have already been paid on the Ordinary capital for last year, less tax, and the distributions were the same for the preceding three years. The £1 Ordinary stand around 93/- each.

COMPANY NEWS

Buenos Ayres Western Railway Co.—Payment is announced of another six months' interest—3 per cent.—by the Buenos Ayres Western Railway Co. on its 4 p.c. and 5 p.c. Debenture stocks. This is for the half-year ended June 30 last, and, therefore, brings interest on the two stocks up-to-date.

Industrials in Demand

ALTHOUGH trading on the Dublin Stock Exchange was still of moderate dimensions yesterday markets closed the week with a bright appearance. Local Industrials were mostly in good demand, and a number of strong features developed. Great Southern Rails continued in request and recorded fresh gains.

Home Government Funds were well maintained, and Financial Agreement Loan was firm to 111⅛; 3½ p.c. War Loan hardened to 103⅛.

Banks held steady to firm, apart from Bank of Ireland stock, which fell 30/- to 338/-. Nationals added pence at 46/6.

Guinness Ord. recovered to 123/-, and Cairnes Deb. spurted two points to 97. Distillers Ord. eased to 87/6.

There was further good buying of Great Southern Rails. The Ord. rose to 15½; the Guar. jumped 50/- to 37, and the Deb. were raised to 60, but exceptionally. The Pref. gave way on profit-taking to 19½. Great Northern were quiet, but the Pref. firmed up to 40½.

Cement Ord. advanced 1/- to 41/-, and Independent "B" Ord. gained 5d. at 77/6. Associated Merchants' Ord. spurted 6/10½ to 52/6, but Irish-American Oil Pref. dipped to 26/9 and Irish Timber Ord. to 85/-.

British Industrials showed little life, and Textiles were easier inclined, with Coats Ord. at 77/4½ and Courtaulds 55/6. Shell Transport Ord. were raised 1/- to 80/-, and Cons. Diamonds quoted 45/-.

FOOD MARKETS

DUBLIN GRAIN.—Light offerings, with demand good at:—Wheat 47/- to 50/-, barley 35/-, and oats 24/- to 35/- per barrel, delivered.

DUBLIN FISH.—Fair supplies cleared early at:—Lobsters, to 6d/- per 1½; salmon 3/6 to 4/3 grilse 4/10 to 5/9, trout 2/6, soles (black) 9d. to 2/7, turbot 1/3 to 1/7, brill 1/4 to 1/7 per lb.; whitings 6d.—herrings 40/-, plaice 65/- to 162/-, dabs 30/- to 33/
